"My grandmother was a self-taught seamstress and could create anything with hand embroidery on wedding-gowns, priests' robes and beaded slippers. In 1946, after the war when resources were scarce, she bought a parachute, unpicked the seams and machine-sewed clothes for her family, including the off-white kebaya with detailed lace-work for herself. She made the other kebaya in 1920 at the age of 20. It was worn on special occasions.

"I wanted to keep the kebayas well-preserved to hand down to my daughters, who live in Paris, and to continue the family tradition of collecting art and antiques, so I contacted FrameHub Gallery. The shophouse gallery in Holland Village has good, natural light, plenty of space and comfortable seating. Alex Mytton-Mills and Jason Teo also advised us on a series of family photos and artworks. We are thrilled with the kebayas, which are marvellous pieces – fit for a museum!"
